

Speaker: Thank you Sir. We will keep it short and precise. We just have a couple of recommendations. We cannot beat those speeches. As an academic think tank, we recommend member states to develop and implement equal rights to all citizens of different ethnicities and religions without considering that a threat for its sovereignty or security. We also urge member states to enhance economic development for domestic regions equally. We are also urging states to respect human dignity of minority groups, and allow them free movement within their own country with UN surveillance of not keeping any minority groups in concentration camps. As for Egypt, we recommend [inaudible] women's rights, such as economic rights, especially in southern Egypt. We also recommend implementing vivid legal mechanisms of protecting women from cruel violence that entails women all over Egypt and goes far beyond domestic violence. As well as we need another mechanism, legal, vivid system for protection of female children marriage in order to make it a safer environment for woman of Egypt. We also recommend awareness of hate speech based on gender and sexuality, especially on social media and other means of mass communication. Hate speech is big now. Thank you.