The Kurdistan region of Iraq is a place of coexistence and diverse society, which has promoted minority rights and inclusion in the region by adapting a multifaceted approach. Legislative measures, educational initiatives, and fostering cultural understanding are the key components of a building a healthy society in Kurdistan. Establishing and enforcing an antidiscrimination law has provided the legal framework for protecting minority rights, which includes Christian, [inaudible], Yazidi, and other religious minorities. Additionally, the educational program that celebrates diversity and teaches tolerance has helped breakdown stereotypes and promoted inclusion. The Kurdistan Regional Government (KRG) is in partnership with civil society and NGOs, including Barzani Charity Foundation, have created a social and political environment where all voices are heard and respected, regardless of their ethnicity or background. Ongoing dialogue and collaboration between different communities has also contributed to a more harmonious and inclusive society. Here are some of the key positive examples that the KRI Kurdistan Region of Iraq has focused on to foster inclusion and support society:

- Representation: the Kurdistan region has ensured diverse representation in various fields, such as politics, business, media and education
 - Equal opportunities: adopting policies, which ensure equal opportunities for everyone regardless of their background
 - Cultural awareness and education promotes cultural awareness and education
 - Antidiscrimination policy: the law has been put in place to enforce and strengthen the antidiscrimination law and policy
